Human Trafficking Victims From Our Clinic Describe Interactions with Healthcare

- "When I went to the ER for help, it was so busy...I waited 3-4 hours, then I saw a social worker, and she was really bitchy and just blew me off, judging me for being a runaway. She asked me sharp questions...I just shut down."
- "The first time I went to the ER, it was because I got beat up. I was questioned a lot, the police were brought in, and people started taking pictures, no one told me what was going on, I was freaked out...so uncomfortable. I was coming to the ER for help, and confidential information about my situation was openly discussed and so many people just kept coming in and out of the room..."
- I went to the hospital to have my baby, I told staff I didn't want them to tell anyone I was there, but when I woke up the baby's father (my trafficker) was sitting next to me. He said "bitch, you better not have said anything..." again, I told them I didn't want anyone to come in and know I was there... mind you, we were fighting the day before and he scared me so bad I peed myself. I was so scared and there he was now sitting next to me."

National Approach to Tackling Human Trafficking

U.S. Government Response

Combating human trafficking requires a comprehensive, multidisciplinary effort. Within government, this means the participation and coordination among agencies with a range of responsibilities that include criminal enforcement, labor enforcement, victim outreach and services, public awareness, education, trade policy, international development and programs, customs and immigration, intelligence, and diplomacy. Coordinated federal efforts that incorporate state, local, and tribal entities, the private sector, civil society, survivors, religious communities, and academia are essential to an integrated response to human trafficking that leverages resources and amplifies results. In the United States, federal agencies work to ensure a whole-of-government approach to address all aspects of human trafficking. Learn more about the Government Response

The Challenge

Now that we are better able to recognize victims of human trafficking & understand how impactful our work can be in the U.S.

- How can what we know be shared and further developed with our global partners?
- How can we support other countries find their own path?
- How can we train and strengthen the roll of primary care providers to address non-communicable diseases as it relates to human trafficking abroad?
- What is the context of our work globally?
